Ward Often the second edition of a hiking guide is essentially the first edition, with maybe a type reset. This is especially true for national park guides. Due to a massive increase in environmental regulations, often instituted by the parks themselves, trail construction has virtually stopped in America's parks. But that didn't prevent Bill and Polly Cunningham from writing a nice new edition. Death Valley and surrounding areas offer a lot of nice hiking and this edition introduces more of it, including some areas to the south and west of the park. New hikes include the Ibex Sand Dunes and Saratoga springs, another pupfish abode. But some things haven't changed. All the hikes in this guide are truly easy, or at least as easy as desert walking gets. Some are handicapped accessible. And all are beautiful. Each hike includes, as in earlier editions, a nice sketch map, point to point trail descriptions, and a nice write up on the natural and historical features you can see on each hike. I strongly recommend this book if you want to get out of your car and explore more of Death Valley on foot. I also strongly recommend you do these hikes from late October to the start of May. Because one other thing that hasn't changed is Death Valley is hot. And none of these hikes are easy in August!
