Cairns and Sydney for several weeks and bought this book as our guidebook. It was a big mistake. We got very little helpful information from this book. For example, it tells you almost nothing about the Blue Mountains in Sydney, but devotes a lot of space to hotels and restaurants there. We found nothing which helped our time in Cairns. In both Sydney and Cairns, the information we got from the tourist information offices was much more helpful. That, combined with Trip Advisor, helped very much. 14 of 15 people found the following review helpful. Lonely Planet loses its way
By MW100
Although this book contains worthwhile information, two deficiencies prevent me from rating it higher. Somewhere along the line Lonely Planet seems to have lost their way. Originally producing guides for the backpacker set, in an apparent effort to broaden its market the budget traveler seems to have nearly been forgotten. There's far too much emphasis on $500 rooms and $300 dinners. While current exchange rates Australia is now an expensive place to travel, there are mid-priced and budget offerings which LP mostly ignores. The second problem: the index is inexcusably incomplete. That's not a problem when planning the trip and you're reading about a region. For that purpose, this book is decent. But it becomes frustrating to use when actually traveling because the town you're in (and mentioned in the book) is often absent from the index. In particular, places mentioned in the little blue boxes scattered around the book seem missing entirely. 1 of 1 people found the following review helpful. A guide to the Miami and "Florida Keys" of Australia
By Maripat Robison
There's a lot of good information in this book and it was in my experience timely and relevant. I'd recommend the Lonely Planet series to anyone touring Australia, and I recommend Australia as a destination even more highly! One of the best bits of advice from this guide was to buy a local SIM card for my phone and iPad as soon as I got there. Armed with that, these guides, and Yelp you are all set anywhere Down Under.
