Lonely Planet, Sara Benson, Lisa Dunford, Carolyn McCarthy : Lonely Planet Zion Bryce Canyon National Parks (Travel Guide) before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Lonely Planet Zion Bryce Canyon National Parks (Travel Guide):

fantastic. Lots of hikes were mentioned and well described - they had all expected turnouts and good maps. I can say this for sure for the hikes we did - Emerald Pools, Riverwalk and the Observation Point. Especially Observation Point, I knew from the book that the last mile or so is flat, and it was reassuring while we were working hard on the hike. We also liked the restaurant recommendations, especially Oscars which was their "pick". We went there twice. The chapter on Bryce wasn't as good as the chapter on Zion. Due to time constraints (we were in Bryce for two half days) we were looking for several short hikes. The only short hikes mentioned were the Mossy cave (outside the park), Bristlecone loop trail and the Navajo-Queens garden combo. But on going there we found that there is another 4 mile hike at Swamp Canyon that was not mentioned in the book as a hike. Only if we knew in advance of this hike, we might have been able to plan our two-half days in Bryce better. Oh well. On looking into the book more I did find a reference to the trailhead on the driving tour. It would be nice if this hike was mentioned in future editions of the book.

By Kate T Excellent book on Zion, Bryce and some surrounding areas but published in 2011 and could use some updating by now. For example, Zion Lodge has undergone some major upgrading since this book was written, and is better than described. It's really making an attempt at environmentally-conscious changes, and has installed a charge for Electric Vehicles in their parking lot, as an example. The entire Zion Park no longer sells water in plastic bottles, and has stations with free refills for spring water in many different locations throughout.

Having little to no cell reception made this an ideal road companion. It brought us to the pristine little town of Panguitch for pizza after 2 days in the wilderness and a gear shop for an inexpensive (never say cheap) sleeping pad when one of ours busted. Thanks Lonely Planet!

About the Author After graduating from college in Chicago, Sara Benson (nickname "Sam") jumped on a plane to the West Coast with just one suitcase and $100 in her pocket. She landed in crazy San Francisco, and today makes her home in a little beach town on the central California coast. She also spent three years living in Japan, after which she followed her wanderlust around Asia for almost a year before returning to the USA, where she has worked as a teacher, a journalist and a national park ranger. She is an all-seasons outdoor enthusiast. The author of more than 30 travel and non-fiction books, Sara's writing has featured in national and international newspapers and magazines, including the Los Angeles Times, Chicago Tribune, London's Independent and National Geographic Adventure. Sara has written for Lonely Planet's Peru, Japan, Las Vegas, California, Canada and Hawaii guides, and contributed to Code Green, Middle of Nowhere and Don't Let the World Pass You By! 52 Reasons to Have a Passport. Her top-three favorite countries (so far, that is) are Nepal, Morocco and Cambodia, but Iceland, Namibia and India are next on her must-see life list. Back in her own country, her favorite places to hang out are the Big Island of Hawaii, New Orleans and Las Vegas. And her most memorable travel experience? Falling off a camel at the edge of the Sahara Desert. To hear more about Sara's travel adventures, visit her website at www.indietraveler.net
