ReynoldsOn the Road Again with Man's Best Friend suffers from a single, major fault: it does not rate the accommodations it lists. The AAA guides, on the other hand, contain basically the same information as On the Road AND include hotel/motel ratings. This is critical, because I don't want to end up at Bates Motel even if they DO permit pets. 8-}17 of 18 people found the following review helpful. How to travel with pets and not go insane!By M. McMechanMy husband is in the Navy and we move every 18 months; On the Road with Man's Best Friend is an absolute essential. We have gone cross country twice not to mention many, many car trips in-between and have found the book to be extremely reliable. A great tool for plans that can change, it has all the essential info - How many pets, If a deposit is required, address info and phone number. All you need is a cell (or pay) phone and a couple of pooches! I would never take a trip without this book with me even if we are traveling without the dogs. A great resource!11 of 12 people found the following review helpful. Book not very accurateBy A CustomerPurchased book because want to go to Myrtle Beach S.C. to play golf and take the dog with me. I called four places, none of the information the books gave tied in with the information the hotels gave me. The one place that would take my dog wanted more for the dog than for my wife and I. I only bought the book because it had lots of listings. I wonder how innacurate the book is in other towns.

Reviewing hotels, inns, bed and breakfasts, and resorts that welcome pets, this guide to traveling with dogs (and cats) provides over 18,000 listings of pet-friendly accommodations. Each entry offers hotel contact information, number of rooms, corresponding rates, and pet policies, including pet fees, size and weight limitations, and pet amenities. Pet rules and regulations for state and national parks are also included.

"A dog may be man's best friend, but have you ever tried to book yourself and your best friend into a hotel? Robert and Dawn Habgood have, and they have compiled the results into On the Road Again with Man's Best Friend." --The New York Times -- (The New York Times)About the AuthorDawn Habgood and Robert Habgood are the authors of the family travel guide Me You the Kids Come Too.
