FAT Boys Historical Research Group, Daniel D. Aranda, Emilio Tapia, Eric Fuller, Mary Kay Shannon : On the Road with the FAT Boys: I-25 in Southern New Mexico before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised On the Road with the FAT Boys: I-25 in Southern New Mexico:

On the Road with the FAT Boys: New Mexico is known as the Land of Enchantment with good reason. Most of the focus of travelers is on the northern part of the state. Often overlooked, southern New Mexico is a land waiting to be explored. On the Road with the FAT Boys explores the highways and byways of this high desert region. Learn the names of mountains, valleys and villages, a little history, some geology, and odd bits of trivia. Discover the hidden beauty of the desert and the compelling stories of survival and failures and of explorers, scalawags and settlers. On the Road with the FAT Boys: I-25 in Southern New Mexico details travel between Las Cruces and Socorro with separate entries for north and south bound travel. Illustration includes a map.

About the AuthorThe FAT Boys definitely are skilled with knife and fork, but the name does not necessarily describe us. Eric Fuller is a life-long rock hound who loves to explore the back country in his four wheel drive. Dan Aranda is a well- known authority on Apaches and published historian. Emilio Tapia grew up working the land and is of Apache descent. The Boys are joined by reenactor and old west historical illustrator Mesilla Joe Lopez and Mary Kay Shannon, a museum curator/historian and artist. Pool all of their talents and passions together and you have the FAT Boys.
