Tom Harrison Maps : Palisades Trail Map (Tom Harrison Maps) before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Palisades Trail Map (Tom Harrison Maps):

Palisades trail map By Vigie This map covered most of the area we were needing to see. The scope was just right. Mileage was helpful for gauging time. 5 of 5 people found the following review helpful. Not as Useful as Most Harrison Maps By Fritz R. Ward So you want to visit the Palisades and need a good map. Perhaps you want to climb over some of the Sierra's last remaining glaciers, or maybe you want to hike to First and Second Lakes, or perhaps you want more detail about the Pacific Crest Trail in the area. All are nice reasons to visit and you should take a good map with you. Is this Harrison product that map? Often I would say yes. Harrison maps are the most detailed maps available for most of California. They are GPS compatible, show trails clearly, and include point by point mileage. Elevation profiles are accurate and the contour lines on these topographical maps are easy to read. But I don't recommend this particular trail map, at least not whole heartedly. The reason is that, except for the trails right out of Big Pine, none of the other routes show entry or exit points. I prefer maps that either focus narrowly on a single trail or route (the Harrison map of the Dipsea trail is an excellent example) or alternatively cover a large enough area to build several loop hikes around (the Harrison map of the trails around Bishop Pass is an excellent example of this sort of map). The map of the Palisades falls smack in between. Too broad to be useful for hiking the canyon alone, it is too narrowly focused for those who want an extended backpack trip. It has all the accuracy Harrison maps are famous for, but is less useful.

The Palisades Trail Map covers the Big Creek area of the Eastern Sierra on the boundary between Kings Canyon National Park and Inyo National Forest. It includes the Palisades and Norman Clyde Glaciers, Bishop and Mather Pass, and the Big Pine Lakes. Shaded-relief topographic map printed on excellent waterproof and tear resistant durable material in vibrant colors. GPS Compatible - Complete UTM Grid Mt. Sill Mt. Jepson Mt.
