Ian Littlewood : Paris: A Literary Companion before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Paris: A Literary Companion:

Here is a book for anyone whose pulse quickens at the thought of a caf terrasse at dusk or a mtro sign on a crowded boulevard. The Paris that comes alive in this Literary Companion is the city that writers from Rabelais to Hemingway have observed and celebrated for the past five hundred years. By interweaving extracts from their work with his own informative commentary Ian Littlewood offers the reader, district by district, a wonderfully evocative glimpse of the streets, squares and buildings of Paris. Montaigne, Gibbon, Balzac, Hugo, Dickens, Thackeray, Flaubert, Zola, James, Miller, Rhys, Orwell, Simenon, Bellow are among the many writers whose work is represented here. The book also contains maps and illustrations. A perfect book to remind one of the streets of Paris. Evening Standard The only complaint is that it is too short. Spectator Marvellously rich reading. Sunday Telegraph

About the Author Ian Littlewood has taught at universities in France, America, Japan and the UK and now lives in Sussex with his wife and daughter. He is the author of literary companions to Paris and Venice as well as books on French history and western perceptions of Japan.
